Artists for Humanity Showcased At BCEC

What: Artists for Humanity (AFH) strives to bridge economic, racial and social divisions by giving Boston's urban young people hands-on experience in creativity, business, teamwork, and self-governance through paid employment in the arts. As part of the MCCA's Art Program, we are proud to showcase the talents of these individuals at the Boston Convention & Exhibition Center from now until the end of December.

Who: AFH employs Boston teens in programs that translate their urban experiences into creative services for medium to large business and corporate environments. In the process, young artists develop entrepreneurial skills and are paid as artist apprentices. Working with skilled artist mentors, AFH teens are promoting their economic development and receiving guidance to reach their full potential.

The MCCA's Art Program continues to be a catalyst for raising cultural awareness and local support for Boston's art community, and is proud to be able to provide AFH with a venue to display their vibrant artwork.

When: Now until the end of December, 2007

Where: Boston Convention & Exhibition Center
415 Summer Street
Boston.
